Native Americans played a significant yet often heraldless role in the formation of the United States. As a result, Native American entrepreneurs are often eclipsed. Other companies and entrepreneurs make more noise, for example on social media and in pop culture. But November is designated as Native American Heritage Month. As a result, this seems like a good time to highlight Native American entrepreneurs. Native American EntrepreneursHere 8 of the best Native American entrepreneurs working in the U.S. right now. Stephen Mills (AQIVO) honors his Native American heritage and named his information securities company AQIVO in honor of it. This is Chomesh's word for 'shooting star'. The company has brought revenue of $2.6 million while Mills is also keen to give something to his community too: he coaches Young Indian Americans and business owners on the subject of a government contract. Dave Anderson belongs to both the Chucataw and Chipova tribes. It certainly qualifies him to appear on a list of Native American entrepreneurs. Anderson founded dave's famous barbecue franchise, once voted as the hottest restaurant concept in America by News Restaurant Nation. The Anderson chain now has more than 170 restaurants around Country. Evans Craig (Internet Technology Services) Evans Craig wants to use his company to help all Native Americans on high-speed internet. His company achieves this goal by providing affordable but good quality technology services. Craig felt great pride for his Navaho legacy - along with some Scottish family. And he's made some on-the-go entrepreneurship, Craig designed a national network to connect 49 tribal nations to the Council of Energy Resource Tribes. With the Red Cloud War, the Chief made a name for himself, which lasted between 1866 and 1868. During this time, he battled with the U.S. military to control parts of Montana and Wyoming. In modern times, Henry Red Cloud founded lakota solar company. The company produces residential solar heaters as well as other alternative energy and protection devices. In 2010, Notah Begga III (Kivason Foods) founded Kivason Foods. The wholesale company sells fresh Bison meat. For example, products include frozen bison steaks, bison burgers, bison dogs, bison chilli and bison jerk. The company is popular among Native Americans as bison has been a source of spiritual nutrition and nutrition for generations. Access to the company extends beyond the Native American community too, as bison are a lower fat and higher protein alternative to beef. Not long ago KivaSun Foods was awarded a USDA contract asking them to provide 520,000 pounds of bison for inclusion in the food distribution program on the Indian Reservation.David Petite (StatSignal Systems) as something of a serial inventor, T. In addition, simple business ideas can begin as part-time investments that can eventually grow into full-time companies. With the right market niche, a simple business idea can provide a huge source of income for an entrepreneur. There are a variety of low-cost business investments that can be started simply using items that a person already owns, such as a car, computer or video camera. Once public demand for certain services is identified intact or focusing on a specific target market, an entrepreneur can offer certain services at a cost to others and maintain a thriving business. Some business ideas started using the equipment a person has at their disposal include providing transportation services, freelance writing or providing film making or video production services. Many entrepreneurs start their own businesses enjoying any skills or undergraduate knowledge that they have. Many companies outsource their work or use freelances to complete certain work assignments. For example, virtual assistants have become very popular because many companies are willing to accept services over the Internet. Virtual assistants can create various projects such as data entry, accounting, word processing services, etc. to do so. In addition, some companies routinely seek the services of an expert consultant to obtain skilled information. Independent counsellors can come from all walks of life and have a variety of abilities. A successful consultant uses his undergraduate abilities to advise his clients on certain issues such as computers, accountants, copywriting, taxes and PR. A consultant business has low startup costs, and an entrepreneur can usually start a business simply by marketing their services to potential customers and setting up a work plan. As internet popularity increases, it's relatively easy to start an online store company. Many entrepreneurs use websites like eBay to sell items found at home or items that are made from scratch. A person can also start a website business and sell items online. So customers can buy items directly from the website. Some entrepreneurs work as independent consultants in order to market the products or services of a hosting company. These marketing consultants receive commissions for each sale and income opportunities can grow as the marketing consultant increases its customers. For example, some well-known companies that use direct marketing consultants to sell their products are Mary Kay, Avon, Malalaoka and more. Direct marketing consultants work for themselves and complete Exceed your earnings potential and work schedule.
